We give these views for what they are worth, and in the public interest; Governor Brown is of the opinion that no sacrifice is too great for the Democratic party to make, if that sacrifice will result in the deleat of Grant and his followers and the elevaand respect for the rights which it guarantees; but he does not propose that the Democratic party shall abandon either its principles or its organization. After denouncing the enforcement act, Governor Brown says:

We admit that many of the favorite theories of the Democratic party were dissily, and forever, acticed by the late war between the States. Among these we canmarate the right of a State to interpose its severeign authority to arrest these minor differences? THE DWELLING OF THE ABSENT. BY MISS. JOHN H. UHL.

A piace of graves! Not in

"God's Acre" only,
Where safe from pain and sin,
And ne more lonely,
Sleep the stonambered throng
O" dear, dead faces,
White unto us belong
Their empty places;
Not where the oak woods shade
That quiet mesdow,
Where solemn tryst is made
'Twist sun and shadow,
Not where alone our ghosts
Of by-gones haunt us;
Not where the end-eyed hosts
Of memory daunt us—

But up and down the street
They come to meet us,
They stay our harrying feet,
Their whispers greet us.
Touch of their shadowy paims
Stills all line's rever,
Hinting what restful caims
Are their's forever.

A place of graves it seems,
The dear old village,
Each old-lime garden teems
With Death's stern tillage;
Benind yon cottage panes,
Which woodbine graces
After september rains,
Foundiar faces
Peer forth with yearning look,
That instant filting;
We know in that dear nook
No one is sitting. Across the echoing floors

Across the schoing floors
Of homesteads stately,
Behind the sad, shut doors
So wide-flung lately,
Some soundless footballs gilde
In noontides stilly,
Some viewless forms abide
When eve grows chilly,
So when we enter in
To great the living,
Our wandering thoughts they win
To free ber grieving;
Our speech of common things
Soundsstrange and hollow;
We list the flight of wings
That bid us follow.

Ah! not in vain, some night, When rain is falling. Shall we essay that flight, Obey that calling; When shall the autumn dawn, Through bronzed leaves stealing Of that oak-shadowed lawn. Our share revealing. Our share revealing.

A quiet sorrow
